His way now led toward the riverside regions, and a cleansing whiff of tar was to be detected in the stagnant autumn air. Men with the blue jersey and peaked cap of the boatman or the white duck of the dockers began to replace the corduroys and fustian of the laborers. Shops with nautical instruments in the windows, rope and paint sellers and slop shops with long rows of oilskins dangling from hooks all proclaimed the neighborhood of the docks.

The admiral quickened his pace and straightened his figure as his surroundings became more nautical, until at last, peeping between two high dingy wharfs, he caught a glimpse of the mud colored waters of the Thames and of the bristle of masts and funnels which rose from its broad bosom. To the right lay a quiet street, with many brass plates upon either side and wire blinds on all of the windows. The admiral walked slowly down it until "The St. Lawrence Shipping Company" caught his eye. He crossed the road, pushed open the door and found himself in a low ceilinged office, with a long counter at one end and a great number of wooden sections of ships stuck upon boards and plastered all over the walls.

"Is Mr. Henry in?" asked the admiral.

"No, sir," answered an elderly man from a high seat in the corner. "He has not come into town today. I can manage any business you may wish seen to."

"You don't happen to have a first or second officer's place vacant, do you?"

The manager looked with a dubious eye at this singular applicant.

"Do you hold certificates?" he asked.

"I hold every nautical certificate there is."

"Then you won't do for us."

"Why not?"

"Your age, sir."

"I give you my word that I can see as well as ever and am as good a man in every way."

"I don't doubt it."

"Why should my age be a bar, then?"

"Well, I must put it plainly. If a man of your age, holding certificates, has not got past a second officer's berth, there must be a black mark against him somewhere. I don't know what it is, drink or temper or want of judgment, but something there must be."

"I assure you there is nothing, but I find myself stranded, and so have to turn to the old business again."

"Oh, that's it," said the manager, with suspicion in his eye. "How long were you in your last billet?"

"Fifty one years."

"What!"

"Yes, sir, one and fifty years."

"In the same employ?"

"Yes."

"Why, you must have begun as a child."

"I was 12 when I joined."

"It must be a strangely managed business," said the manager, "which allows men to leave it who have served for 50 years, and who are still as good as ever. Who did you serve?"

"The queen, heaven bless her."

"Oh, you were in the royal navy. What rating did you hold?"

"I am admiral of the fleet."

The manager started and sprang down from his high stool.

"My name is Admiral Hay Denver. There is my card. And here are the records of my service. I don't, you understand, want to push any other man from his billet, but if you should chance to have a berth open I should be very glad of it. I know the navigation from the red banks right up to Montreal a great deal better than I know the streets of London."

The astonished manager glanced over the blue papers which his visitor had handed him. "Won't you take a chair, admiral?" said he.

"Thank you. But I should be obliged if you would drop my title now. I told you because you asked me, but I've left the quarter deck, and I am plain Mr. Hay Denver now."

"May I ask," said the manager, "are you the same Denver who commanded at one time on the North American station?"

"I did."

"Then it was you who got one of our boats, the Comus, off the rocks in the bay of Fundy? The directors voted you 250 guineas as salvage, and you refused them."

"It was an offer which should not have been made," said the admiral sternly.

"Well, it reflects credit upon you that you should think so. If Mr. Henry were here, I am sure that he would arrange this matter for you at once. As it is, I shall lay it before the directors today, and I am sure that they will be proud to have you in our employment and I hope in some more suitable position than that which you suggest."

"I am very much obliged to you, sir," said the admiral and started off again, well pleased, upon his homeward journey.

CHAPTER XV.

STILL AMONG SHOALS.

Next day brought the admiral a check for £5,000 from Mr. McAdam, and a stamped agreement by which he made over his pension papers to the speculative investor. It was not until he had signed and sent it off that the full significance of all that he had done broke upon him. He had sacrificed everything. His pension was gone. He had nothing save only what he could earn. But the stout old heart never quailed. He waited eagerly for a letter from the St. Lawrence Shipping company, and in the meanwhile he gave his landlord a quarter's notice. Hundred pound a year houses would in future be a luxury which he could not aspire to. A small lodging in some inexpensive part of London must be the substitute for his breezy Norwood villa. So be it then! Better that a thousandfold than that his name should be associated with failure and disgrace.

On that morning Harold Denver was to meet the creditors of the firm and to explain the situation to them. It was a hateful task, a degrading task, but he set himself to do it with quiet resolution. At home they waited in intense anxiety to learn the result of the meeting. It was late before he returned, haggard and pale, like a man who has done and suffered much.

"What's this board in front of the house?" he asked.

"We are going to try a little change of scene," said the admiral. "This place is neither town nor country. But never mind that, boy. Tell us what happened in the city."

"God help me! My wretched business is driving you out of house and home!" cried Harold, broken down by this fresh evidence of the effects of his misfortunes. "It is easier for me to meet my creditors than to see you two suffering so patiently for my sake."

"Tut, tut," cried the admiral. "There's no suffering in the matter. Mother would rather be near the theaters. That's at the bottom of it, isn't it, mother? You come and sit down here between us and tell us all about it."

Harold sat down with a loving hand in each of his.

"It's not so bad as we thought," said he, "and yet it is bad enough. I have about 10 days to find the money, but I don't know which way to turn for it. Pearson, however, lied as usual when he spoke of £13,000. The amount is not quite £7,000."

The admiral clapped his hands. "I knew we should weather it after all! Hurrah, my boy! Hip, hip, hip, hurrah!"

Harold gazed at him in surprise while the old seaman waved his arm above his head and bellowed out three stentorian cheers. "Where am I to get £7,000 from, dad?" he asked.

"Never mind. You spin your yarn."

"Well, they were very good and very kind, but of course they must have either their money or their money's worth. They passed a vote of sympathy with me and agreed to wait 10 days before they took any proceedings. Three of them, whose claim came to £3,500, told me that if I would give them my personal I O U and pay interest at the rate of 5 per cent their amounts might stand over as long as I wished. That would be a charge of £175 upon my income, but with economy I could meet it, and it diminishes the debt by one-half."

Again the admiral burst out cheering.

"There remains, therefore, about £3,200 which had to be found within 10 days. No man shall lose by me. I gave them my word in the room that if I worked my soul out of my body every one of them should be paid. I shall not spend a penny upon myself until it is done. But some of them can't wait. They are poor men themselves and must have their money. They have issued a warrant for Pearson's arrest. But they think that he has got away to the States."

"These men shall have their money," said the admiral.

"Dad!"

"Yes, my boy, you don't know the resources of the family. One never does know until one tries. What have you yourself now?"

"I have about £1,000 invested."

"All right. And I have about as much more. There's a good start. Now, mother, it is your turn. What is that little bit of paper of yours?"

Mrs. Denver unfolded it and placed it upon Harold's knee.

"Five thousand pounds!" he gasped.

"Ah, but mother is not the only rich one. Look at this!" And the admiral unfolded his check and placed it upon the other knee.

Harold gazed from one to the other in bewilderment. "Ten thousand pounds!" he cried. "Good heavens! where did these come from?"

"You will not worry any longer, dear," murmured his mother, slipping her arm round him.

But his quick eye had caught the signature upon one of the checks. "Dr. Walker!" he cried, flushing. "This is Clara's doing. Oh, dad, we cannot take this money. It would not be right nor honorable."

"No, boy, I am glad you think so. It is something, however, to have proved one's friend, for a real good friend he is. It was he who brought it in, though Clara sent him. But this other money will be enough to cover everything, and it is all my own."

"Your own? Where did you get it, dad?"

"Tut, tut! See what it is to have a city man to deal with. It is my own and fairly earned, and that's enough."

"Dear old dad!" Harold squeezed his gnarled hand. "And you, mother! You have lifted the trouble from my heart. I feel another man. You have saved my honor, my good name—everything. I cannot owe you more, for I owe you everything already."

So while the autumn sunset shone ruddily through the broad window these three sat together hand in hand, with hearts which were too full to speak. Suddenly the soft thudding of tennis balls was heard, and Mrs. Westmacott bounded into view upon the lawn with brandished racket and short skirts fluttering in the breeze. The sight came as a relief to their strained nerves, and they burst all three into a hearty fit of laughter.

"She is playing with her nephew," said Harold at last. "The Walkers have not come out yet. I think that it would be well if you were to give me that check, mother, and I were to return it in person."

"Certainly, Harold. I think it would be very nice."

He went in through the garden. Clara and the doctor were sitting together in the dining room. She sprang to her feet at the sight of him.

She sprang to her feet at the sight of him.

"Oh, Harold, I have been waiting for you so impatiently," she cried. "I saw you pass the front windows half an hour ago. I would have come in if I dared. Do tell us what has happened."

"I have come in to thank you both. How can I repay you for your kindness? Here is your check, doctor. I have not needed it. I find that I can lay my hands on enough to pay my creditors."

"Thank God!" said Clara fervently.

"The sum is less than I thought and our resources considerably more. We have been able to do it with ease."

"With ease!" The doctor's brow grew clouded, and his manner grew cold. "I think, Harold, that you would do better to take this money of mine than to use that which seems to you to be gained with ease."

"Thank you, sir. If I borrowed from any one, it would be from you. But my father has this very sum—£5,000—and, as I tell him, I owe him so much that I have no compunction about owing him more."

"No compunction! Surely there are some sacrifices which a son should not allow his parents to make."

"Sacrifices! What do you mean?"

"Is it possible that you do not know how this money has been obtained?"

"I give you my word, Dr. Walker, that I have no idea. I asked my father, but he refused to tell me."

"I thought not," said the doctor, the gloom clearing from his brow. "I was sure that you were not a man who, to clear yourself from a little money difficulty, would sacrifice the happiness of your mother and the health of your father."

"Good gracious! What do you mean?"

"It is only right that you should know. That money represents the commutation of your father's pension. He has reduced himself to poverty and intends to go to sea again to earn a living."

"To sea again! Impossible!"

"It is the truth. Charles Westmacott has told Ida. He was with him in the city when he took his poor pension about from dealer to dealer trying to sell it. He succeeded at last, and hence the money."

"He has sold his pension," cried Harold with his hands to his face. "My dear old dad has sold his pension." He rushed from the room and burst wildly into the presence of his parents once more. "I cannot take it, father," he cried. "Better bankruptcy than that. Oh, if I had only known your plan. We must have back the pension. Oh, mother, mother, how could you think me capable of such selfishness? Give me the check, dad, and I will see this man tonight, for I would sooner die like a dog in the ditch than touch a penny of this money."

CHAPTER XVI.

A MIDNIGHT VISITOR.

Now all this time while the tragicomedy of life was being played in these three suburban villas, while on a commonplace stage love and humor and fears and lights and shadows were so swiftly succeeding each other, and while these three families, drifted together by fate, were shaping each other's destinies and working out in their own fashion the strange, intricate ends of human life, there were human eyes which watched over every stage of the performance and which were keenly critical of every actor on it. Across the road beyond the green palings and the close cropped lawn, behind the curtains of their creeper framed windows, sat the two old ladies, Miss Bertha and Miss Monica Williams, looking out as from a private box at all that was being enacted before them.

The growing friendship of the three families, the engagement of Harold Denver with Clara Walker, the engagement of Charles Westmacott with her sister, the dangerous fascination which the widow exercised over the doctor, the preposterous behavior of the Walker girls and the unhappiness which they had caused their father, not one of these incidents escaped the notice of the two maiden ladies. Bertha, the younger, had a smile or a sigh for the lovers; Monica, the elder, a frown or a shrug for the elders. Every night they talked over what they had seen, and their own dull, uneventful life took a warmth and a coloring from their neighbors, as a blank wall reflects a beacon fire.

And now it was destined that they should experience the one keen sensation of their later years, the one memorable incident from which all future incidents should be dated.

It was on the very night which succeeded the events which have just been narrated when suddenly into Monica Williams' head, as she tossed upon her sleepless bed, there shot a thought which made her sit up with a thrill and a gasp.

"Bertha," said she, plucking at the shoulder of her sister, "I have left the front window open."

"No, Monica, surely not." Bertha sat up also and thrilled in sympathy.

"I am sure of it. You remember I had forgotten to water the pots, and then I opened the window, and Jane called me about the jam, and I have never been in the room since."

"Good gracious, Monica, it is a mercy that we have not been murdered in our beds. There was a house broken into at Forest Hill last week. Shall we go down and shut it?"

"I dare not go down alone, dear, but if you will come with me. Put on your slippers and dressing gown. We do not need a candle. Now, Bertha, we will go down together."

Two little white patches moved vaguely through the darkness, the stairs creaked, the door whined, and they were at the front room window. Monica closed it gently down and fastened the snib.

"What a beautiful moon!" said she, looking out. "We can see as clearly as if it were day. How peaceful and quiet the three houses are over yonder. It seems quite sad to see that 'To Let' card upon No. 1. I wonder how No. 2 will like their going. For my part I could better spare that dreadful woman at No. 3 with her short skirts and her snake. But, oh, Bertha, look! look! look!" Her voice had fallen suddenly to a quivering whisper, and she was pointing to the Westmacotts' house. Her sister gave a gasp of horror and stood with a clutch at Monica's arms, staring in the same direction.

There was a light in the front room, a slight wavering light such as would be given by a small candle or taper. The blind was down, but the light shone dimly through. Outside in the garden, with his figure outlined against the luminous square, there stood a man, his back to the road, his two hands upon the window ledge and his body rather bent as though he were trying to peep in past the blind. So absolutely still and motionless was he that in spite of the moon they might well have overlooked him were it not for that telltale light behind.

"Good heavens!" gasped Bertha, "it is a burglar."

But her sister set her mouth grimly and shook her head. "We shall see," she whispered. "It may be something worse."

Swiftly and furtively the man stood suddenly erect and began to push the window slowly up. Then he put one knee upon the sash, glanced round to see that all was safe and climbed over into the room. As he did so he had to push the blind aside. Then the two spectators saw where the light came from. Mrs. Westmacott was standing as rigid as a statue in the center of the room, with a lighted taper in her right hand. For an instant they caught a glimpse of her stern face and her white collar. Then the blind fell back into position, and the two figures disappeared from their view.

"Oh, that dreadful woman!" cried Monica. "That dreadful, dreadful woman! She was waiting for him. You saw it with your own eyes, Sister Bertha!"

"Hush, dear, hush and listen!" said her more charitable companion. They pushed their own window up once more and watched from behind the curtains.

Supporting his aunt's head upon his knee.

For a long time all was silent within the house. The light still stood motionless as though Mrs. Westmacott remained rigidly in the one position, while from time to time a shadow passed in front of it to show that her midnight visitor was pacing up and down in front of her. Once they saw his outline clearly, with his hands outstretched as if in appeal or entreaty. Then suddenly there was a dull sound, a cry, the noise of a fall, the taper was extinguished, and a dark figure fled in the moonlight, rushed across the garden and vanished amid the shrubs at the farther side.

Then only did the two old ladies understand that they had looked on while a tragedy had been enacted. "Help!" they cried, and "help!" in their high, thin voices, timidly at first, but gathering volume as they went on until The Wilderness rang with their shrieks. Lights shone in all the windows opposite, chains rattled, bars were unshot, doors opened, and out rushed friends to the rescue. Harold, with a stick; the admiral, with his sword, his gray head and bare feet protruding from either end of a long, brown ulster; finally Dr. Walker, with a poker, all ran to the Westmacotts. The door had been already opened, and they crowded tumultuously into the front room.

Charles Westmacott, white to his lips, was kneeling on the floor supporting his aunt's head upon his knee. She lay outstretched, dressed in her ordinary clothes, the extinguished taper still grasped in her hand, no mark or wound upon her—pale, placid and senseless.

"Thank God, you are come, doctor," said Charles, looking up. "Do tell me how she is, and what I should do."

Dr. Walker kneeled beside her and passed his left hand over her head, while he grasped her pulse with the right.

"She has had a terrible blow," said he. "It must have been with some blunt weapon. Here is the place, behind the ear. But she is a woman of extraordinary physical powers. Her pulse is full and slow. There is no stertor. It is my belief that she is merely stunned and that she is in no danger at all."

"Thank God for that!"

"We must get her to bed. We shall carry her up stairs, and then I shall send my girls in to her. But who has done this?"

"Some robber," said Charles. "You see that the window is open. She must have heard him and come down, for she was always perfectly fearless. I wish to goodness she had called me."

"But she was dressed."

"Sometimes she sits up very late."

"I did sit up very late," said a voice. She had opened her eyes and was blinking at them in the lamplight. "A villain came in through the window and struck me with a life preserver. You can tell the police so when they come. Also that it was a little fat man. Now, Charles, give me your arm, and I shall go up stairs."

But her spirit was greater than her strength, for as she staggered to her feet her head swam round, and she would have fallen again had her nephew not thrown his arms around her. They carried her up stairs among them and laid her upon the bed, where the doctor watched beside her, while Charles went off to the police station, and the Denvers mounted guard over the frightened maids.

CHAPTER XVII.

IN PORT AT LAST.

Day had broken before the several denizens of The Wilderness had all returned to their homes, the police finished their inquiries, and all come back to its normal quiet. Mrs. Westmacott had been left sleeping peacefully with a small chloral draft to steady her nerves and a handkerchief soaked in arnica bound round her head. It was with some surprise, therefore, that the admiral received a note from her about 10 o'clock asking him to be good enough to step in to her. He hurried in, fearing that she might have taken some turn for the worse, but he was reassured to find her sitting up in her bed, with Clara and Ida Walker in attendance upon her. She had removed the handkerchief and had put on a little cap with pink ribbons and a maroon dressing jacket daintily fulled at the neck and sleeves.

"My dear friend," said she as he entered, "I wish to make a last few remarks to you. No, no," she continued, laughing as she saw a look of dismay upon his face, "I shall not dream of dying for at least another 30 years. A woman should be ashamed to die before she is 70. I wish, Clara, that you would ask your father to step up. And you, Ida, just pass me my cigarettes and open me a bottle of stout."

"Now, then," she continued as the doctor joined their party. "I don't quite know what I ought to say to you, admiral. You want some very plain speaking to."

"'Pon my word, ma'am, I don't know what you are talking about."

"The idea of you at your age talking of going to sea and leaving that dear patient little wife of yours at home, who has seen nothing of you all her life! It's all very well for you. You have the life, and the change, and the excitement, but you don't think of her eating her heart out in a dreary London lodging. You men are all the same."

"Well, ma'am, since you know so much, you probably know also that I have sold my pension. How am I to live if I do not turn my hand to work?"

Mrs. Westmacott produced a large registered envelope from beneath the sheets and tossed it over to the old seaman.

"That excuse won't do. There are your pension papers. Just see if they are right."

He broke the seal, and out tumbled the very papers which he had made over to McAdam two days before.

"But what am I to do with these now?" he cried in bewilderment.

"You will put them in a safe place, or get a friend to do so, and if you do your duty you will go to your wife and beg her pardon for having even for an instant thought of leaving her."

The admiral passed his hand over his rugged forehead. "This is very good of you, ma'am," said he, "very good and kind, and I know that you are a stanch friend, but for all that these papers mean money, and though we may have been in broken water of late we are not quite in such straits as to have to signal to our friends. When we do, ma'am, there's no one we would look to sooner than to you."

"Don't be ridiculous," said the widow. "You know nothing whatever about it, and yet you stand there laying down the law. I'll have my way in the matter, and you shall take the papers, for it is no favor that I am doing you, but simply a restoration of stolen property."

"How's that, ma'am?"

"I am just going to explain, though you might take a lady's word for it without asking any questions. Now, what I am going to say is just between you four and must go no farther. I have my own reasons for wishing to keep it from the police. Who do you think it was who struck me last night, admiral?"

"Some villain, ma'am. I don't know his name."

"But I do. It was the same man who ruined or tried to ruin your son. It was my only brother, Jeremiah."

"Ah!"

"I will tell you about him—or a little about him, for he has done much which I would not care to talk of nor you to listen to. He was always a villain, smooth spoken and plausible, but a dangerous, subtle villain all the same. If I have some hard thoughts about mankind, I can trace them back to the childhood which I spent with my brother. He is my only living relative, for my other brother, Charles' father, was killed in the Indian mutiny.

"Our father was rich, and when he died he made a good provision both for Jeremiah and for me. He knew Jeremiah, and he distrusted him, however, so instead of giving him all that he meant him to have he handed me over a part of it, telling me with what was almost his dying breath to hold it in trust for my brother and to use it in his behalf when he should have squandered or lost all that he had. This arrangement was meant to be a secret between my father and myself, but unfortunately his words were overheard by the nurse, and she repeated them afterward to my brother, so that he came to know that I held some money in trust for him. I suppose tobacco will not harm my head, doctor? Thank you; then I shall trouble you for the matches, Ida." She lit a cigarette and leaned back upon the pillow, with the blue wreaths curling from her lips.

"I cannot tell you how often he has attempted to get that money from me. He has bullied, cajoled, threatened, coaxed—done all that a man could do. I still held it with the presentiment that a need for it would come. When I heard of this villainous business—his flight and his leaving his partner to face the storm—above all, that my old friend had been driven to surrender his income in order to make up for my brother's defalcations—I felt that now indeed I had a need for it. I sent in Charles yesterday to Mr. McAdam, and his client, upon hearing the facts of the case, very graciously consented to give back the papers and to take the money which he had advanced. Not a word of thanks to me, admiral. I tell you that it was very cheap benevolence, for it was all done with his own money, and how could I use it better?

"I thought that I should probably hear from him soon, and I did. Last evening there was handed in a note of the usual whining, cringing tone. He had come back from abroad at the risk of his life and liberty just in order that he might say goodby to the only sister he ever had and to entreat my forgiveness for any pain which he had caused me. He would never trouble me again, and he begged only that I would hand over to him the sum which I held in trust for him. That, with what he had already, would be enough to start him as an honest man in the new world, when he would ever remember and pray for the dear sister who had been his savior. That was the style of the letter, and it ended by imploring me to leave the window latch open and to be in the front room at 3 in the morning, when he would come to receive my last kiss and to bid me farewell.

"Bad as he was, I could not, when he trusted me, betray him. I said nothing, but I was there at the hour. He entered through the window and implored me to give him the money. He was terribly changed—gaunt, wolfish, and spoke like a madman. I told him that I had spent the money. He gnashed his teeth at me and swore it was his money. I told him that I had spent it on him. He asked me how. I said in trying to make him an honest man and in repairing the results of his villainy. He shrieked out a curse, and pulling something out of the breast of his coat—a loaded stick, I think—he struck me with it, and I remember nothing more."

"The blackguard!" cried the doctor, "but the police must be hot upon his track."

"I fancy not," Mrs. Westmacott answered calmly. "As my brother is a particularly tall, thin man, and as the police are looking for a short fat one, I do not think that it is very probable that they will catch him. It is best, I think, that these little family matters should be adjusted in private."

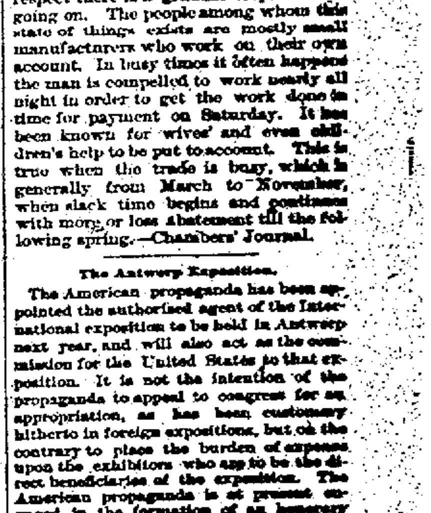
"My dear ma'am," said the admiral, "if it is indeed this man's money that has bought back my pension then I can have no scruples about taking it. You have brought sunshine upon us, ma'am, when the clouds were at their darkest, for here is my boy who insists upon returning the money which I got. He can keep it now to pay his debts. For what you have done I can only ask God to bless you, ma'am, and as to thanking you I can't even"—

"Then pray don't try," said the widow. "Now run away, admiral, and make your peace with Mrs. Denver. I am sure if I were she it would be a long time before I should forgive you. As for me, I am going to America when Charles goes. You'll take me so far, won't you, Ida? There is a college being built in Denver which is to equip the woman of the future for the struggle of life, and especially for her battle against man. Some months ago the committee offered me a responsible situation upon the staff, and I have decided now to accept it, for Charles' marriage removes the last tie which binds me to England. You will write to me sometimes, my friends, and you will address your letters to Professor Westmacott, Emancipation college, Denver. From there I shall watch how the glorious struggle goes in conservative old England, and if I am needed you will find me here again fighting in the fore front of the fray. Goodby—but not you, girls. I have still a word I wish to say to you."

"Give me your hand, Ida, and yours, Clara," said she when they were alone. "Oh, you naughty little pussies, aren't you ashamed to look me in the face? Did you think—did you really think that I was so very blind and could not see your little plot? You did it very well, I must say that, and really I think that I like you better as you are. But you h[illegible] all your pains for nothing, you [illegible] conspirators, for I give you my [illegible] that I had quite made up my mind [illegible] to have him."

And so within a few weeks our [illegible] ladies from their observatory [illegible] mighty bustle in The Wilderness [illegible] 2-horse carriages came and [illegible] with favors to bear away the [illegible] were destined to come back [illegible] they themselves in their [illegible] dresses went across as invited [illegible] double wedding breakfast which was held in the house of Dr. Walker. Then there were health drinking and toasts and laughter and changing of dresses and rice throwing when the carriages drove up again, and two more couples started on that journey which ends only with life itself.

Charles Westmacott is now a flourishing ranchman in the western part of Texas, where he and his sweet little wife are the two most popular persons in all that county. Of their aunt they see little, but from time to time they see notices in the papers that there is a focus of light in Denver, where mighty thunderbolts are being forged which will one day bring the dominant sex upon their knees. The admiral and his wife still live at No. 1, while Harold and Clara have taken No. 2, where Dr. Walker continues to reside.



"Oh, you naughty little pussies."

As to the business, it had been reconstructed, and the energy and ability of the junior partner had soon made up for all the ill that had been done by his senior. Yet with his sweet and refined home atmosphere he is able to realize his wish and to keep himself free from the sordid aims and base ambitions which drag down the man whose business lies too exclusively in the money market of the vast Babylon. As he goes back every evening from the crowds of Throgmorton street to the tree lined, peaceful avenues of Norwood, so he has found it possible in spirit also to do one's duties amid the babel of the city and yet to live beyond it.

THE END.

The "Walking Stick" Business.

Under the general term "walking stick trade" is included the manufacture of sticks for umbrellas, etc., of which an incredible number are produced annually. In England—which, by the way, almost supplies the world—the number of men employed is about 4,000. The trade is rather scattered, though by far the greatest part is done in London, where in the east end it is carried on extensively. The workmen are chiefly drawn from the poorer classes of St. Luke's, Finsbury, Shoreditch, Whitechapel and Bethnal Green, in which parishes the principal workshops are situated. The trade is strictly a season one. It is among the first to feel depression and among the last to recover. A large number of the men employed earn on the average a fair living, especially those in the largest houses, who enjoy, as a rule, the most regular employment.

But a large section of the trade pays bad wages—in fact, in some cases it is a mere existence. A great quantity of sticks produced by these latter are manufactured in dwelling houses—nay, in the very living rooms, though in this respect there is a gradual improvement going on. The people among whom this state of things exists are mostly small manufacturers who work on their own account. In busy times it often happens the man is compelled to work nearly all night in order to get the work done in time for payment on Saturday. It has been known for wives' and even children's help to be put to account. This is true when the trade is busy, which is generally from March to November, when slack time begins and continues with more or less abatement till the following spring.—Chambers' Journal.

The Antwerp Exposition.

The American propaganda has been appointed the authorized agent of the International exposition to be held in Antwerp next year, and will also act as the commission for the United States to that exposition. It is not the intention of the propaganda to appeal to congress for an appropriation, as has been customary hitherto in foreign expositions, but on the contrary to place the burden of expense upon the exhibitors who are to be the direct beneficiaries of the exposition. The American propaganda is at present engaged in the formation of an honorary commission to represent the United States at the Antwerp exposition. It is intended to include in this commission President T. W. Palmer, Charles Henrotin, the Belgian consul at Chicago, the ex-ministers of the United States to Belgium, the Belgian ministers at Washington, all the Belgian consuls in the United States, prominent manufacturers interested in export trade from every state in the Union, and all the chiefs of departments of the Chicago exposition. The entire expense of the commission will be borne by the propaganda.

Spanish Cream.

Boil an ounce of isinglass in half a pint of water until it is thoroughly dissolved. Strain and mix with a quart of cream or good milk. If cream is used, scant the ounce of isinglass a very little. Set on the fire and stir almost constantly until it begins to boil. Remove and when nearly cool add gradually, stirring constantly, the beaten yolks of 6 eggs and a glass of white wine. Pour it into a deep dish, sweeten to taste with powdered sugar, strain the mixture, stir until cool and put it into a mold.

Minced Beef With a Sauce Piquante.

There is good authority for believing that Alexandre Dumas was fond of minced beef served with a sauce piquante made of this recipe: Take 2 tablespoonfuls of chopped onion with 4 tablespoons of tarragon vinegar, thickened with a roux. Into this is stirred a pint and a half of stock. When the sauce is boiled to the proper consistency, a teaspoon of chopped mushrooms and a tablespoon of chopped gherkins are added. The sauce is seasoned highly and is served in a gravy boat.

Republican County Ticket.

FOR COUNTY COMMISSIONERS,

THIS is a Republican year so far as McKean county is concerned.

JOHN L. MCKINNEY of Titusville, will be nominated for State Treasurer on the Democratic ticket if he will accept. He has a barrel and that is what the Democratic machine is anxious to get into. They will hardly succeed.

THAT the whole Republican ticket will be elected in McKean County this year we have every reason to believe, yet our ears are not long enough to cause us to bray about the success of any particular individual. We leave that to the opposition.

THE Republicans of Ohio gathered in great numbers in Akron on Tuesday last to open the campaign. It is estimated that there were 30,000 strangers in the city. Gov. McKinley made a rousing speech in favor of protection, liberal pensions and honest money.

EVIDENCES of the revival of business prosperity are gathering and everybody is glad. Any man who glories in the downfall of business enterprises because his party is not in power is not a good citizen. No man is infallible. We are all liable to err in judgment.

EX CHIEF JUSTICE of the Supreme Court, Hon. Isaac G. Gordon, died at his residence in Brookville on Monday of last week, aged 74 years. Judge Gordon served 15 years on the Supreme Bench of the State and was considered a very able jurist. He represented this county, with Elk and Jefferson, in the Legislature in 1860-61.

CIVIL COURT convened on Monday, Hon. T. A. Morrison presiding. The case of Myer Rothstein against the Pennsylvania Railroad Company for damages, is on trial as we go to press. The plaintiff was injured several years ago at Altoona, while boarding a train. Messrs. Mullin & Mullin and J. W. Lee represent the plaintiff and J. R. Thompson, the defendants.

A VERY potent reason is given why Mr. Mitchell's vote in Kane borough and vicinity will be very satisfactory to that gentleman. If anyone will take occasion to refer to the vote cast in Kendall borough (now 6th ward of Bradford) last year they will see that Mr. Howells, the Republican candidate for Treasurer, was not treated as he was in some localities. He got nearly his party vote, and would have been elected had he received the same relative vote throughout the county. Mr. Howell's friends know that they are largely indebted to Geo. Mitchell for that vote.

AT this early stage of the campaign attention is called to the onslaughts being made on the present board of County Commissioners and their predecessors in office, by the Democratic press of the county. For many years past the board of Commissioners has been selected from the most upright citizens of the county, men in whom the people have entire confidence. It may be that they and their friends will be pleased to see them denounced as thieves and robbers. It is possible these denunciations will occur to them when they are asked to vote for candidates on the Democratic tickets. If such scurrility wins this fall it will be the first time it has succeeded in McKean County.

THE Washington correspondent of the New York Commercial says: Tom Reed has been chewing up half a dozen men a day with seeming relish. Men ambitious to be statesmen and yet too eager to wait till they could learn something, have put themselves against him, one after another, only to be completely done up. The dashing young orator from Nebraska, Mr. Bryan, was wiped out with a few well directed questions, which developed that he knew nothing about the subject he was trying to discuss, and Reed finding him too small game turned him over to Hopkins of Illinois who handled him easily. DeArmond had a long struggle with the Republican giant before being thrown to the earth, and he probably got much satisfaction out of being able to stand up before the champion so long. He may even have thought that Reed was somewhat timid about attacking him. He evidently did not realize that the ex-Speaker was getting out of him the sort of admissions he wanted to use into the methods of that Congress. And so it has been through the discussion. Reed has made one of the inexperienced men who have pitted themselves against him to put the democrats in a stupid position. The funny feature of the thing has been his finding himself every now and then on some proposition at the head of a section of the Democratic party whom he led away from the committee and placed in front of its own battle line."

was grandly decorated and the hospitality shown by its citizens was unbounded.

It was estimated that the parade on Tuesday brought not less than 200,000 persons into the city. The parade began at 11 o'clock in the morning and the last post passed the reviewing stand at 4.15 o'clock in the afternoon. The veterans who did not march were as many as those who did, and the number of marchers, on a conservative estimate, was from 20,000 to 25,000. Among the notable persons in the line were General J. Warren Keifer, of Ohio, General Lew Wallace, who marched with the McPherson Post of Crawfordsville, General Wilder, of the famous Wilder's Brigade, and Past Commanders R. B. Beath, Wagner, Kountz, Vandervoort and Palmer.

It was a veritable double Chinese wall of humanity through which the old soldiers passed in the three miles from start to finish. There was no lack of enthusiasm, and the special features of the parade were cheered to the echo from square to square.

Numerous stands were erected at points along the route, the official reviewing stand being placed on the grounds of the court house. From here the veterans were reviewed by Commander in Chief Weissert.

Ex-President Harrison stood on his right, and Generals Lucius Fairchild of Wisconsin, and Lew Wallace, both of whom marched in line until the stand was reached, on his left.

The business sessions of the Encampment commenced on Wednesday morning and continued until Friday noon. At Wednesday's session the election of officers for the coming year took place which resulted in the choice of John G. B. Adams, of Lynn, Mass., as Commander-in-Chief, I. N. Walker, of Indianapolis, as Senior Vice Commander, and J. C. Bigger, of Texas, as Junior Vice Commander. For the first time in the history of the National Encampment, these officers were all elected by acclamation. Pittsburgh was also chosen as the place for holding the Encampment next year by acclamation.

At the camp-fire held on Wednesday evening Gen. Harrison presided and Maj. McKinley of Ohio, was one of the principal speakers.

A DEARLY BOUGHT EXPERIENCE

A good many workingmen voted the Democratic ticket last fall to get a whack at the rich men and they have succeeded remarks the Milwaukee Sentinel. The rich men are having a pretty bad time at present. It is estimated that the shrinkage in values in this country since last January is more than a thousand million dollars. A great deal of this sum, though not all by any means, has been taken from the rich.

But what part of their loss has been gained by the poor man, or the workingman? Does the workingman find that the condition which pinches the rich improves his condition? Does it profit the workingman when banks suspend, when mines close and factories stop work or largely reduce their operations? True, the rich are getting their punishment but how is it with the workingman? Is he having an altogether pleasant time, and are his prospects for the future unusually encouraging? In fact, does it not begin to look as if there a certain solidarity of interests between the various classes of our people, if we may assume that there are classes, in consequence of which, when the interests of one class are injuriously affected they all suffer to a large proportion so that when one is punished the smart comes to all.

The only thing which the Milwaukee paper is sound beyond all cavil. And it may be said furthermore, that there is no more mischievous phase in political demagogy than that which seeks to persuade the workingman that the rich man is his natural enemy. Especially is this true in a country where the lines of demarcation between rich and poor are so lightly drawn.

It has been tersely said that there are "but three generations between shirt sleeves and shirt sleeves." The meaning of the apothegm is, that the poor family of one generation becomes a rich family in the next and again a poor family in the third. There are exceptions to all rules, and as a rule this is not literally true. But it is true that in no other country on earth has the poor man or his children so favorable an opportunity to acquire a competency, and it is equally true that under no other political or economic system has this opportunity ever had so free a course as under the prevalence of the principles and policies represented and maintained by the Republican party.—Reading Times.

THE West is not all crazy on the silver question. For instance the St. Paul Pioneer Press says: "We say deliberately as the result of a survey of public opinion the country over, that the men who vote for free silver, or for free coinage at any ratio, the men who do not support unconditional repeal of the Sherman act, will be marked by the voters for retribution. The time has gone by for trifling and trimming. The day has passed when a man might please a few loud talkers by voting for silver coinage, and comfort his friends by assuring them that he was sound enough on the principle of money, but felt that he ought to make some little concession. It is faithful or faithless in this test and the people will have a reckoning for those who disappoint them and refuse the aid the country needs."

ONE of the most daring railroad robberies of recent years took place on the Lake Shore Railroad near Kessler, Ind., about 100 miles east of Chicago, at 3 o'clock on Tuesday morning of this week. Passenger train No. 14, east bound, was stopped by the engineer discovering an open switch a short distance ahead. No sooner was the train stopped than 15 or 20 masked robbers boarded the train, blew open the express safe with dynamite and carried off about $15,000 of express money. They were armed with Winchesters and would allow no one to leave a car. The engineer comprehended the situation at once and made a desperate resistance with a coal pick but was shot in the shoulder and seriously wounded.

THE Boston Journal reports that a firm in that city is buying tin pails at $4 a hundred less than last year. Yet the democrat papers used say that the tariff on tin plate would make tin pails so high that the American laborer would have to carry their dinners around in a piece of brown paper.

to be assumed that the pensioner is a fraud who is to be convicted and fixed first and then be called upon to prove his innocence. Under an order made public last Friday it is directed that there shall be no more absolute suspensions except where the record shows on its face that the soldier was not entitled to any pension whatever. It is believed that the number of pensioners who will fall in this class will be very small.

In thus backing down from its recent unpatriotic and inequitable position the Administration has shown discretion. The wholesale suspensions had aroused a popular condemnation that was rapidly growing in intensity and that was shared by leading Democratic Congressmen and Senators. The legality of Secretary Hoke Smith's position was questioned by lawyers of ability who are fully conversant with the pension laws, and it was understood that Mr. Lincoln lately Deputy Commissioner of Pensions, Senator Gallinger, of New Hampshire, and Representative Dalzell, of this State, were preparing several cases which were to be taken into the courts to test the autocratic methods of the man from Atlanta. Under the circumstances the retreat of Smith and his Commissioner of Pensions is not to be wondered at, although it practically amounts to an admission that their recent treatment of the veteran soldiers of the Union was entirely unjustified.

Commissioner Lochren accompanies the new order with a lame apology for the former position of the Department, in which he says that Secretary Smith "has for some time questioned the fairness of the practice of the Pension Bureau" in making the suspensions. And yet it seems that he did not arrest this unfair action of the Bureau until he was coerced to do so by an outraged public sentiment, by open denunciations from leading public men, by the threat of legal proceedings and by the fear that the Administration's attack upon Union soldiers might result in the loss of votes at the coming fall elections.

Whatever the motive that prompted the backdown, the Union veteran may congratulate himself that he is hereafter to receive at least as much consideration as the commonest offender, and he can hardly expect more from an Administration presided over by the famous writer of pension vetoes who now occupies the White House.—Agitator.

THE SILVER DOLLAR'S HISTORY

The question of the free coinage of silver has been upon every one's lips for months past. The action of the House of Representatives in voting for the repeal of the Sherman silver purchasing act is already familiar. It needs yet to be acted upon by the Senate, and there is hardly a doubt of that body's concurrence, when the repealing clause will be sent to President Cleveland for his signature. It may therefore be said that it will soon become a law, and the result upon the financial stringency of the country will then be ascertained. In this connection a history of the silver dollar may be of interest.

The first silver dollar was put in circulation in 1794. It was a crude design, says a historian. On the obverse or face of the coin was imprinted the head of a young lady facing to the right. Her hair was flowing to such an extent that she looked as if facing a gale of wind.

In 1795 Congress stepped in to the aid of the typical damsel and tied her hair up with a bit of ribbon.

The fifteen stars were afterward changed to the original thirteen in recognition of the number of States.

In 1840 the design was again changed and the silver dollar bore the full figure of a neatly dressed woman in a flowing garment. The designer thought however to put in the thirteen stars and the coin was soon called in. The new design had the lady surrounded by the stars. It was an improvement on its predecessor, but [illegible] air of the female was defiant and [illegible].

The dollar of 1836 was the first a[illegible] tic piece of silver coined by the United States Mint.

On April 22, 1864, the first dollar having the legend "In God we trust" was coined.

In 1873 the era of the trade dollar of 900 fineness began. This troublesome dollar ran its erratic course in just five years.

In 1878 the liberty dollar made its appearance. Miss Anna Williams, a teacher in the Girls Normal School at Philadelphia sat for the portrait, her profile being then considered the most perfect obtainable. Her classic features still decorate the token.—Harrisburg Call.

CLOAK OPENING.

We shall be ready next week with the newest things in Wraps and Jackets for fall wear. You can't afford to buy a new wrap of any sort without first coming here to see. It's one of the coldest of facts that the choicest things are always where the power of collection is greatest.

One can afford to miss almost anything—if they want to. But we're talking to those who count the cost of a new garment, weigh qualities, styles, appearance, and wearing probabilities and all the little round of things worth questioning at such a time. You know—no enthusiasm in this—that our Cloak department is the finest in America. Furs are included—and sealskins.

The possibility of getting such things at dry goods prices brings no end of trade our way. We handle the genuine Alaska seal, London dyed, and are prepared to guarantee every garment brought here.

MILLINERY OPENING.

The formal reception of new Millinery has been arranged for next week also. We shall be pleased to see you, in particular.

What woman but what studies headwear effects? What better place than this to learn of fashions new and winsome and to buy what's wanted at the lowest possible cost? Our millinery work for the spring season exceeds anything you or we had ever known. This Fall shall go one better.

The sight is for you, whether you've the hat question in mind or not.

Hundreds of cases have been cured by it after all other treatment had failed. It is put up in 25 and 50 cent boxes.

Right in Midsummer Summer articles are cut. This great Harness stock is cut to bottom. Everything a horse can need never in Bradford cost so little. Perhaps they never will again. And so with Summer articles.

—Secretary Edge, of the state board of agriculture, says the state's corn crop this year will be a third less than the average. This is undoubtedly owing to the long spell of dry weather which has been experienced in many of the sections of the state.

The resetting of the boundary monuments between Pennsylvania and New York has begun. The commissioners will travel on foot along the entire line between the two States from Delaware to Lake Erie and are required to examine every monument.

The Jewish new year commenced Sunday evening last and ended Monday evening. Their places of business were closed on Monday and wherever they had houses of worship they congregated and the day was devoted to prayer. This year, according to the Hebrew calendar, is 5654 from the creation of the world.

—President Cleveland expresses himself as satisfied that the Senate will comply with his desires on the silver question. The Senate was polled Monday for the benefit of the President, when it was found that 47 were for repeal, 30 against and 8 doubtful, 3 of whom will likely go with the repealers and 5 with the latter.

—The junior editor of the MINER said last week in the local columns of the paper that "the Marvin Creek road is a disgrace to civilization." In that opinion he differs with the senior editor, who thinks that the road from Smethport to Mt. Jewett is not only in good condition, but better than it has been for fifteen years past.

—Presiding Elder Latimer writes to Mr. Gleason that the pulpit of the M. E. Church will be filled next Sabbath and each succeeding Sabbath to the end of the conference year. He does not say who will officiate next Sabbath. Quarterly meeting will be held on Thursday Sept. 21 at 12 30 p. m., when the Presiding Elder will officiate. He is compelled to leave on the 2 30 train.

—Capt. W. B. Chapman and wife, of Bradford, left on Monday last for Chicago, to attend the reunion of the Chapman family of this country. It took place in the Indiana building and it was expected that at least 400 of the name would be present. The Captain went loaded with statistics to tell what a wonderful part the family had taken in building up the great Republic.

—The New York Sun has been investigating McAllister's 400, and prints a number of receipted bills of the last century showing that a Stuyvesant sold handkerchiefs, a DePeyster jeans, a Rhinelander hats, a Brevoort pewter spoons, a Beekman molasses and a Roosevelt lamp black. Their plutocratic descendants may not like it but if the old pioneers were honest traders there is nothing to be ashamed of in their record.

The latest intelligence we have from Mr. Helms, who is being treated in the Homoeopathic hospital on the Fair grounds in Chicago, is a note from Mrs. Helms to Mrs. S. M. Richmond received on Wednesday in which she states that a slight improvement had been observable within the last few hours before writing. Clarence Colegrove saw him several times last week and the impression left upon his mind, were not favorable to his recovery.

The Smethport ball club met a crushing defeat from the Renovo club yesterday at Hamlin Park. The score stood Renovo 25, Smethport [illegible]. A great cause from Smethport says "The truth is our boys cannot play ball as against the Renovo nine." Bolivar defeated Smethport last week 5 to 1. Bradford does not rejoice in Smethport's discomfiture. Nothing would suit Bradford better than to pull the proud peacock of the hub off the roost but as between Smethport and a foreign club we are loyal to McKean county's representatives.—Star

In last week's Emporium Press we find the following notice of the death of Francis J. Chadwick, a brother of the late Jeremiah Chadwick of this place: On Sunday, August 27th, F. J. Chadwick, one of our oldest and most worthy citizens died at the residence of his daughter in Costello aged 81 years six months and 15 days. The deceased was raised in this county and during his long residence here was universally respected. He was a gentleman of rare intellectual ability—a great reader and thoroughly conversant with the history of this country and the prominent events of his time—strong in his convictions and ever ready by argument and knowledge of facts to maintain them. His remains were interred in his daughter's family burying ground in Costello on Monday the 28th.

—The Keystone State, ever prolific of new things, is now the scene of a discovery which will bring wealth to at least one man. T. J. Clemmons, near Bear Lake, Warren county, has found a peat bed, a mineral paint mine and a peculiar moss. The peat and moss are especially adapted to the use of florists, seedsmen and nursery men. The peat has no equal as a bedding for live stock as it makes double the amount of manure, besides being the finest deodorizer and absorber known. Mr. Clemmons' mineral paint mine (sienna) is from six to eighteen inches in depth, is of many colors, and when burnt, produces several other colors. Nearly two years ago he mixed linseed oil with the raw sienna and painted a small board and hung out doors where it has been subject to all kinds of weather and is yet as bright as when first applied.

Important to School Directors.

The following act of Assembly was passed by the last Legislature and approved by the Governor on the [illegible]th day of June:

Be it enacted, &c., That Boards of school directors and controllers shall provide suitable and convenient water-closets for each of the schools under their official jurisdiction, not less than two for each school building where both sexes are in attendance in their respective school districts, with separate means of access for each, and unless placed at a remote distance one from the other, the approaches or walks thereto shall be separated by a substantial close fence, not less than seven feet in hight, and it shall be the duty of the directors or controllers to make provision for keeping the water closets in a clean, comfortable and healthful condition.

A Good Thing to Keep at Hand.

From the Troy Kansas Chief.

Some years ago we were very much subject to severe spells of cholera morbus; and now when we feel any of the symptoms that usually precede that ailment, such as sickness at the stomach, diarrhoea, etc., we become scary. We have found Chamberlain's colic, cholera and diarrhoea remedy the very thing to straighten one out in such cases, and always keep it about. We are not writing this for a pay testimonial, but to let our readers know what is a good thing to keep handy in the house. For sale by A. B. Armstrong.

I have been a sufferer from catarrh for years. Having tried a number of remedies advertised as "sure cures" without obtaining any relief, I had resolved never to take any other patent medicines, when a friend advised me to try Ely's Cream Balm. I did so with great reluctance, but can now testify that after using it for six weeks I believe myself cured. It is a most agreeable remedy—an invaluable Balm.—Joseph Stewart, 624 Grand Avenue, Brooklyn.

A boy of Mrs. McDonald's, living near here, fell against a red hot stove and was fearfully burned. The pain was terrible, and it was thought the burn was so severe as to scar the child for life. I sold the lady a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm, which after greasing the sore, she applied. It soon removed all the fire and eased the pain, and in ten days the boy was well, no trace of the scar remaining. J. D. McLaren, Keysport, Clinton county, Ill. For sale by A. B. Armstrong.

All that honesty, skill and experience can do to produce a perfect pill, has been employed in making DeWitt's Little Early Risers. The result is a specific for sick headache, biliousness and constipation. Sold by A. B. Armstrong.

Persons troubled with chronic diarrhoea should try Chamberlain's colic, cholera, and diarrhoea remedy. Many cases have been cured by it after all else had failed and skilled physicians were powerless. For sale by A. B. Armstrong.

Most of Them Are Models of Historic Structures in Different Countries—One Building in Which All the Rules of Architecture Have Been Violated—California Day at the Exposition.

WORLD'S FAIR, Sept. 14.—[Special.]—There are many small buildings in the fair grounds which are rarely mentioned by the press and yet are worthy of attention. There for instance, is the alleged Bureau of Public Comfort which is regarded as a huge joke but there is plenty of room and chairs and as no business is done there I find it very conducive to comfort. The intention was that it should give visitors information about getting hotels and avoiding swindles but as they do the former before entering the park and take their chances on the latter, the officials have a sinecure. Near it is the Puck building, which is a perfect little gem and the display of newspapers and the processes shown are well worth seeing. It is considered a trifle odd that a humorous paper should receive such a concession, but that kind of a show was needed to fill up the set.

The only building left of Old Fort Dearborn is set up just as it stood at the time of the massacre and long afterwards at the corner of State and Twenty-third. When it was taken down for removal a number of arrowheads knives and other Indian relics were found and these are exhibited in it. As the nucleus of Chicago it is well worth seeing. The New England Clambake company occupies an artistic little building and so do the local agents of the International Sunday School association. The Tonquin building was originally put up in China and was transported in sections for the French exposition of 1889 and after being exhibited in various places was brought here. It is said to be an exact model of the palace of Cochin China. The Pavilion of Tunis is anther reproduction and is the largest structure in the French colonial exhibit.

The Police station is not only a model for that sort of thing, but is the headquarters for the ambulance patrol and a full squad of policemen. Visitors can there see a first-class illustration of police life and action. The great White Horse Inn, near the southwest corner of the park, is a pretty fac simile of the English original but owing to its remote situation has few visitors. The cooking is guaranteed to be strictly English, and therefore I have not sampled it. On the lake front near the Manufactures building, is one of the queerest pavilions in the park, erected and maintained by Van Houten & Zoon of Weesp Holland, to advertise the cocoa trade. It is in the style of a Dutch house of the fifteenth century and is a regular museum of relics of that time but the business part of it is the hot cocoa served by Dutch girls in native costume. The Merchant Tailors building is another business enterprise and so, I suppose is the Horsford's model hospital near the Woman's building.

Much might be said of the Japanese tea houses which look like mere booths, and yet are so elaborately ornamented with carvings and other delicate handiwork that 600 men were busy for two months in making them of the Shoe and Leather building which is a small affair but crowded with objects of interest of the Japanese Hoden which is an exact reproduction of the oldest monastery in Japan, erected in 1297 of the Hunter's camp which is a most hidden in the scrubby timber at the south end of the island or of many other little buildings stuck in various corners and are the more charming, because one comes on them unexpectedly. In the extreme south end of the park are several very interesting things which are not seen by more than one visitor in fifty and just outside of the grounds at the northeast corner is the only great failure of the exposition era. This is the so-called Spectatorium which covers 200 000 square feet, is in tolerable completion to the third story and was abandoned when $500 000 had been expended on it. It was designed for concerts and great spectacular displays, and the story goes that two or three noted actors are "in it" for about $100 000 each.

The Illinois building had from the start attracted more visitors than any other state building because it is really one of the main structures of the fair with California's building second but since her great display on the 9th California has been the chief attraction. The building is a newly described. The central plan is that of a regular old mission of adobes but to relieve the sombreness of such a structure Moorish features have been adopted and a low central dome with roof garden and outer platform for restaurant purposes. The whole affair is said by experts to be late as the era of architecture which can be located in one building, and yet, the general effect is pleasing. It seems like a bit of Granada in Moorish times, of Mexico and Mission California all in one.

The floor space, including gallery, is 100 300 square feet, and it is well filled with every sort of semi-tropical growth and mineral output from Yreka to Los Angeles—the fig and the lemon, the orange, the grape and the prune, the great pampas grass with fleecy plumes eighteen inches in length, the dark green palm and trailing vines and flowers of all forms and hues. In the most conspicuous place is the noted equestrian statue of prunes which I cannot admire but most people do, if I may judge from the crowd always about it and all around are minerals of such variety that only a Dana or a Hitchcock could describe them. And, apropos de boots, as we say in Paris, this reminds me of some very fiery discussions I have recently listened to in which California and the Chinese were the leading theme.

Henry George started it of course. In the Single Tax congress the leading exponent 'ave ahead savagely against all exclusion laws whereupon Henry George took the stand and maintained the right and the duty of our government to prevent all further immigration of the Mongolians. As if a chemical reagent had suddenly separated a compound into two radically different elements, the assemblage at once divided and a furious and highly entertaining discussion continued till a late hour. Mr George next went over and stirred up the Methodist preachers and about the same time all the Buddhist priests and scholars attended Dr Barrows' church and were made much of; and so the Chinese question has got into one or two branches of the religious congress and is mixed up with opium and whisky, labor idolatry and Sunday observance in a way that is highly entertaining if not instructive. It is no one-sided thing either. Men of undoubted piety and talent maintain the principle of exclusion, though the presence of these learned and gentlemanly Buddhists gives the other side a strong re-enforcement in arguments of the sentimental kind.

So many things happened on California's Day that some of the best were but indifferently reported. That 9th of September, 1850, was indeed a memorable day in the annals of these United States, for on that day President Fillmore set his autograph to the many acts which terminated the longest and stormiest session of congress ever held before the war era. By that series of acts the status of all the region acquired from Mexico was fixed, the territories were organized on a uniform plan which has continued ever since, and "the slavery controversy was put to sleep forever"—so they said! The next year, however, Harriet Beecher Stowe waked it up. By one act California, without the slow process of a territorial childhood, sprang at once into statehood, like Minerva fully endowed and armor-clad from the brain of Jupiter. And of the territories then created New Mexico and Utah alone remain, though deprived of half their original areas.

Well, there was so much history to commemorate on that day that the splendid showing of the Transportation Department was a trifle obscured in some minds. Among the curious displays in the parade was the fairy carriage of the Michigan Buggy company, drawn by the smallest horse on earth, an equine Tom Thumb 27 inches high. Another was a parade of about 150 bicycles, the wheelers representing all sorts of races and characters from Columbus to Delaware, with Knights, such as tub racing and other aquatic comedies, and so the evolution of progress was exhibited from the hollowed log of the aborigine to the latest triumph of science.

It is not in the power of any one man to get the hang of all that is done and being done in the various branches of the religious congresses of this month. Suffice it to say that the Catholics began on Sunday the 3rd and in their eight days really did a wonderful work. What with Maryland Day, Columbus Day, Spain's Day and Irish Day yet to come their prominent men really had a great deal to do with running the fair, and since they have called my attention to it I confess it does seem a little singular that all of the two Americas, save a little strip of the north Atlantic coast should have been discovered and explored by and should once have belonged to the Catholic nations. I guess they have earned a right to be prominent here.

The Jews began on Aug. 27, but their activity in the fair is exclusively of a business nature. The Lutherans and the Welsh religio-musical societies were active last week. The Protestant denominations are now making a so-called presentation each morning and evening while the main religious parliament is running, the Congregationalists having led off on the 10th. In the correspondence of Dr. Barrows are letters from over a thousand of the world's prominent men and religious teachers, warmly approving the great parliament, including Gladstone and nearly all the great lights of the English establishment. The more I see of it the more wonderful this congress seems and I recall a statement in the history of India that the great mogul, Akbar, once attempted to organize such a congress.

Curious Articles Used in Transportation from All Parts of the World—Greatest Collection Ever Under One Roof—Fun with Curved Mirrors—A New Foreigners "Getting" Too Rapidly.

WORLD'S FAIR, Sept. 7.—[Special.]—Evolution is the leading idea of this age and many are influenced by it much more than they suspect. In nearly all the main buildings here one will find the exhibits so arranged as to show the slow development through all the ages from the cave of the original troglodyte to the palaces of Fifth avenue, from the rude dug-out of the antediluvian to the wonderful ocean steamer and from the wooden headed idols of Alaska to the lovely creations in the art palace. We have here the races of mankind from the cultured Brooklynite down to some Africans who have no word for any number beyond a hundred, where man ends the trained animals in the great plaisance show take up the links, and Professor Garner has sent from Africa to the congress of sciences a promise that by the next world's fair he will have the language of the apes reduced to writing and give us an outline of their civil constitutions and forms of government.

Those who have read the new Genesis, according to Tyndall, Huxley, Spencer and Darwin, will remember the statements ("interesting but tough," as Huck Finn said), that when the primordial ape had ascended the family tree so high that he in a measure got rid of his tail he descended to earth, organized the primitive commonwealth, developed into an anthropoid and by natural selection and survival of the fittest evolved the anthropomorphic primordial types, the homunculus, the prognathus, the troglodyte, the autochthon and the terragen. These were the generations of primeval man and terragen was the father of the aborigine. Well, we have them all here, alive or stuffed or shown in rude carvings by the first men, who were contemporary with them, and in the Transportation building we have the history of their progress in that line. And the order of the use made of animals was evidently this: First the dog and then the ox, the ass and the horse in succession, with camels, llamas, buffaloes and elephants in their native regions.

The visitor entering that building at the north end comes first upon an all wooden Mexican cart with two of those long horned oxen hitched, and the whole get up is so comically natural, so exactly like the vehicle as I saw it in Mexico, that I almost expected to hear the surly "Caramba! Viejo" about carrambas as one hears it in Mexico. In these carts one finds what was undoubtedly the primitive form of the wheel—that is a cross section cut out of a tree, the toughest wood the barbarian could find, of course. It was a great day for civilization when some man invented a way to hollow out the center of the wheel and make it much lighter while retaining its strength, but when hub, spoke and felloe were completed there was civilization indeed.

In the same line is the ox cart from Siam, the rude country cart from Turkey, the heavy wheels from Santo Domingo and the specimens from Madagascar, upper India and South Africa. But all these have hub and spokes, though of very rude construction, which in reason the wonder [illegible] the solid wheel should still be in use in Mexico. In bridles, saddles and spurs all these nations show far greater ingenuity, which may be due to the fact that they used horses long before they did vehicles. But the interesting fact is that in water transportation they reached perfection on a small scale almost at the start. The [illegible] of the Malays, the canoes of the [illegible], the canoes and even the little [illegible] and [illegible] the kayak [illegible] of the Esquimaux are about as good for their purposes as civilized men could make.

United States Consul Merrill [illegible] has sent [illegible] the mountains of [illegible] the same pattern [illegible] the year 27 and [illegible] Peter and Andrew [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible] are the palanquins, sedan [illegible] and other appliances [illegible] Madame [illegible] During most of the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] from China, the jinrikisha from Japan, [illegible] palanquin used by high caste folks in India, the sedan chair in which the silleros of the Andes carried travelers over the mountains, and the many varieties of chairs, baskets and carriages. As for the horses, oxen, camels, elephants, donkeys and llamas, a mere list of them would stretch out to a tedious length.

It is a far cry from a palanquin to a Pullman palace car, but the railway exhibit in the great annex is a world's fair in itself. The Transportation building proper is only 900 feet long and 250 feet wide, but the annex extends from it to the west side of the grounds and covers nine acres. In it are locomotives from every firm of makers in the United States but two, cars of every kind known to the business, with every kind of brake and buffer, and many old relics of great historic interest. All this, however, the public of today knows all about. Neither is it necessary for me to set forth the wonderful array of skiffs, canoes, outriggers and lifeboats, the models of the large steamers and sailing vessels, the immense diorama views of all the principal ports in the world, the raised maps showing the depths and shallows in the principal harbors or the really wonderful and practical illustrations of steering and determining courses. Over the beautifully carved arch to the main entrance is a paragraph from Macaulay to the effect that next to the art of printing improved transportation has done most to civilize and humanize the race, which I beg leave to condense to a single text—Easy Communications Improve Good Manners.

In the Italian section of the Liberal Arts is shown the evolution of glass as used for toilet and decorative purposes. The varieties of mirrors in sizes and shapes is almost endless and the enormous curved glasses on each side of the north entrance furnish continual amusement to the visitors. It is quite an old device, this of distorting the human form by curved mirrors, but these are only curved vertically, just as if a great slab of plate glass were bent, and are of such size and clearness that a large group is reflected and distorted at once. A family party standing before the one finds itself transformed to a set of twelve-footers, and before the other to a family of fat dwarfs as broad as they are long. Simple as it seems in the descriptions the distortion is so unlike [illegible] form that a startling effect is produced and the laughter is loud and long. It is in Machinery hall, however, that the progress of modern man is best illustrated. There stands the first printing press used in New Hampshire—and any good blacksmith and carpenter can make one like it—and beside it the wonderful Hoe, doing off copies of the Daily Columbian at and came back [illegible] almeh and "unmated" cal Cairo street." Others have taken to strong drink as a steady thing. The Persian theater was closed for immorality, was allowed to open and got worse than ever, then the Persian commissioners sent in a complaint that their country was shamefully misrepresented by folks who were not Persians and the place was closed again—for good, perhaps. The Javanese closed their village, complaining of extortion, but were persuaded to open again for awhile at least. A colored gentleman went into the Kentucky restaurant, ordered dinner, was ordered out, hit the waiter a terrific one in the mouth, was taken to a lonely cell and paid a few dollars for his fun. The lost Aryans do not seem to be getting along with us so well as they did.

The butchers, grocers and their collaborers had a grand and glorious time on their day. Brazil and Pennsylvania are drawing an immense crowd today. Utah's building already shows signs of considerable doings—day after tomorrow, and on the same day California expects to do wonders. Next after that the greatest day, and probably the biggest crowd between Illinois day and Chicago day, will be on the 13th, when nearly all Michigan will be here, as the railroads have made specially low rates. Kansas will take her turn on the 15th and 16th if she does not organize a little bonfire racket in the meantime. Ohio on the 14th, Vermont and all Spanish America on the 13th, New Mexico on the 12th, Nevada on the 14th and Colorado on the 14th, and then will come the greatest day probably between Michigan and Chicago's. This will be Fishermen's day, beginning nominally on the 19th, but the main demonstrations will probably be on the 20th. The next great day probably will be that of the Irish, Sept. 30, and last and greatest of the great days will be Chicago's, Oct. 9, though special days for various bodies are set till Oct. 13.

Already foreign commissioners are appointed for the midwinter fair at San Francisco, and already the commissioners here are wrestling with the problem of removing the buildings when the fair shall have closed. Governor McKinley has issued a proclamation asking Ohioans to come here on their day, Sept. 13, and already the list of entries for the fat stock show is great, and it is to be held Oct. 16. In the congress of religions is an almost exciting session and Oklahoma a committee is in disgrace for asking a woman in some [illegible] awards. The average of good days—meaning the weather—has been larger during the fair than for many years before, the average health of Chicago has been high, the average of [illegible] lower than [illegible] the financial prospects of the fair brightening, the crops are a little better than was expected and the indications [illegible] the great gun is [illegible] and the great [illegible] exit and [illegible] play Home, [illegible] everything will be lovely and the aquatic fowl suspended at a truly Himalayan altitude.

There is one point, however, on which the stockholders feel a large pain. They had calculated that the salvage of the buildings would add materially to the gross receipts, but the engineers and contractors employed to make the estimates have announced that every dollar's worth of material will be consumed in the cost of clearing the grounds and probably more. The Administration building, for instance, cost $450,000, and the best offer they can get is to remove it for all the stuff and $[illegible]. [illegible]

ORIGIN OF THE PICNIC.

The Word Is Modern, but the Thing Signified May Boast of Venerable Age.

This word is said to date from about the year 1802. Then, as now, when such an entertainment was being arranged for it was customary that those who intended to be present should supply the eatables and drinkables. A list of what was considered necessary would be drawn up and passed around, each person picking out such articles of food or drink as he or she was willing to furnish. The name of the article was then nicked off the list. Hence this form of fete champetre became known as a "pick-and-nick," which by a natural transition degenerated into picnic.

But though the word is comparatively recent the thing that is designated is at least two centuries older. Notes and Queries states that there is extant a record of a celebration of this sort which took place in the early part of the seventeenth century, upon the birthday of Charles, prince of Wales, afterward Charles I of England. Mainwaring, in a letter to the Earl of Arundel, bearing date Nov. 22, 1618, says:

"The prince's birthday has been solemnized here by the few marquises and lords which found themselves here, and (to supply the want of lords) knights and squires were admitted to consultation, wherein it was resolved that such a number should meet at Gamiges and bring every man his dish of meat. It was left to their own choice what to bring. Some chose to be substantial, some curious, some extravagant. Sir George Young's invention bore away the bell, and that was four huge brawny pigs, piping hot, bitted and harnessed with ropes of sausages, all tied to a monstrous bag pudding."

The Rarest of All Noses.

It is considered a somewhat singular fact that the rarest of all noses is that found in the middle of the face, and a writer on physiognomy says that, taking a hundred noses at random, one will not find on an average more than three in which the bridge of the nose descends perpendicularly from a straight line drawn exactly between the eyes. A well proportioned nose, according to most authorities, should take up one-third of the profile, measured from the commencement of the hair to the tip of the chin.

Napoleon used to say that a long nose meant a long head. A long nose is generally considered the mental superior of a short one. Hogarth classified noses as angular, aquiline or Roman, parrot beak, bulbous or bottle, straight or Grecian, turned up and snub. Other kinds, which may be added or not, according to taste, are mixed and broken. An unduly red nose does not necessarily indicate that the wearer is a tippler. It may be due to tight lacing, indigestion or emotionality of temperament.

Various Ideas of Paradise.

All desert dwellers, says the St. Louis Republic, die expecting to awake in wooded land supplied bountifully with cold water. You will remember, if you have ever read books of arctic travel, that all natives of the frozen north have paradise pictured as a land of warm sunshine, with glowing fires overhung with pots of boiling whale's blubber and graceful couches of fur scattered here and there. The Caroline islanders, who are passionately fond of liquor, but who are in mortal dread of breaking their necks by falling from one of the millions of cliffs with which their islands abound, believe that paradise will be a land as level as a floor, where one can get drunk and not be in constant dread of cracking his cervical vertebræ.

A House by the Medlar Tree."

A book of this title translated into English from the Italian has led to the frequent inquiry, What is a medlar tree? This inquiry is answered as follows in Meehan's Monthly: It is a common garden fruit in northern Germany, the Mespilus germanica of botanists. It belongs to the same family as the apple, pear and cherry, but does not thrive well except in rather northern regions. As is the case with our persimmon, the fruit is too austere until decay has partially set in. The word decay is not an acceptable one, so the French term "blette" is used. A bletted medlar is fit for use. The Japan plum of the south is very close to the medlar. It is known as Mespilus japonica.

Woodland Heroes.

Almost every locality has a tree that has a habitation or name of its own, so that the place is known by its tree. The "Juniper Tree" of the prophet, the "Parliament Tree" of England, the "Plane Tree" of Xerxes, the "Sacred Oak" of Dodona, the "Charter Oak" of our own country and the Cambridge Elm, under whose shade the Father of Our Country found rest—these are a few in an almost innumerable group of woodland heroes.

Alabama.

Alabama is a soft, musical Indian word, meaning, "Here we rest," and is said to have been the exclamation of a redskin chief who, wandering through that section, was captivated by its well stocked hunting grounds and decided there to remain.

An Old Law.

In the early days of Virginia a law was made punishing with death the man who killed a hog, goat or sheep. This was done to provide for the increase of these animals.

Abundance of Fools.

The world of fools has such a store
That he who would not see an ass
Must bide at home and bolt his door
And break his looking glass.
—Monnoye.

Sailed the Seas 25 Years.

Capt. A. P. Loud is a prominent resident of Hampden, Me. For 25 years he sailed the seas and upon retiring from that calling, was appointed by the U. S. government to superintend its interests in the Alaska seal fisheries, a position he held five years. In speaking of his experience, he says: "For several years I was greatly troubled with nervousness and a pain in the region of my heart. It was almost impossible for me to get rest and sleep. Physicians from New York to San Francisco did me no good, but Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine and New Heart Cure speedily and completely cured me. I owe my present and excellent health to them.

Distressing Kidney and Bladder diseases relieved in six hours by the "New Great South American Kidney Cure." It relieves retention of water and pain in passing it almost immediately. If you want quick relief and cure this is your remedy. Sold by A. B. Armstrong, Druggist, Smethport, Pa.

As Employed In Some of the Most Tasteful Imported Gowns.

Accordion plaiting has become a veritable fad with Parisiennes, appearing principally in afternoon and evening gowns, especially dancing dresses, to which it adapts itself admirably.

White silk gauze dresses are accordion plaited throughout—sleeves, waist and skirt. Valenciennes insertions or narrow guipure edgings alone form the trimming of these accordion plaited gowns which are worn over colored silks.

Mousseline de soie in pale tints of yellow, blue or green is made up in the same fashion for evening wear.

Very attractive day gowns of black chiffon fashioned entirely of accordion plaiting with trimmings of white lace appeal irresistibly to a fastidious taste and harmonize with the prevailing fancy in colors.

Our cut shows an effective tea jacket of scarlet surah, accordion plaited from the neck. The collar and shoulder seams are covered with coarse ecru lace, as are the wide plaited sleeves.

Accordion plaited white silk gauze mounted over white silk provides a new departure in bridal toilets and represents the charmingly simple gown in which a very youthful bride will soon plight her troth.

Once More the Dainty White "Dessous."

Naturally the light colors and materials now in vogue for dresses necessitate a certain change in the "dessous." With them are now worn white muslin petticoats much trimmed in every fantastic way with rich valenciennes lace. White stockings seem gaining favor—elegant, open worked, white silk ones with insertion of valenciennes lace on the instep. Of course these stockings only look well worn with white leather shoes and rich silver buckles. These buckles are often replaced by the embossed silver initial of the wearer inserted in a white satin or leather bow.

But for general wear there is nothing more stylish than a black "dessous." For instance, black gauze stays trimmed with light blue satin and a multitude of black gauze skirts all trimmed with chicoree ruchings of blue faille. With this should be worn polished black leather shoes and black lace rosettes, and the initial in turquoises—c'est le dernier cri.

Effective Ruffs, Ruches, Etc.

Throatlets, ruffs, fichus and small capes of various sorts add to the effectiveness of many of the latest gowns. Our cut is an example of one of the simplest of these—a Henri II ruff.

It consists of a series of Greek net frills edged with white valenciennes lace and forms a throatlet and circular tippet, connected together with [illegible], [illegible] with colored jet embroidery.

White satin ruches are much worn with afternoon and evening gowns. These have each edge finished with a narrow black lace and are double plaited. They extend only around the throat and are tied with a white satin bow.

Stylish New Models.

Some stylish new models are opened in front down the waist, over an underchemisette of lace or figured net. The basque is long, short, full or plain, according to the taste of the wearer. The sleeves, however, are always made of the balloon shape at the top and narrow at the wrist. The smartest blouses are made exactly like ordinary bodices, with a band or sash and the waist. These are often set off by a figaro or Eton jacket of a different material, as silk, velvet or lace embroidered with jet and lined with colored silk.

Fashion Notes.

The latest white muslins from Paris are dotted with tiny embroidered spots of blue, cherry or black.

The fashion of wearing three or four frills round the top of the skirt is not a pretty one, and not one which is at all likely to be popular. The general taste apparently is against any sort of trimming which increases the size of the hips.

Accordion plaited gowns are in high favor with Parisiennes for summer dances.

White skirts begin to be again popular.

There is no doubt that the plain skirt and open jacket has become tiresome to many women, but it still continues in fashion.

A new gown is a smock made of jet beaded net, with large armholes to fit over the sleeves, cut low at the neck, and falling thence to the knee in an unbroken line, where it is edged with a narrow fringe. It is occasionally arranged with a watteau plait at the back and gives a dressy appearance to a gown which has lost its original freshness.

A Leader

Since its first introduction, Electric Bitters has gained rapidly in popular favor, until now it is clearly in the lead among pure medical tonics and alteratives—containing nothing which permits its use as a beverage or intoxicant, it is recognized as the best and purest medicine for all ailments of stomach, liver or kidneys.—It will cure sick headache, indigestion, constipation and drive malaria from the system. Satisfaction guaranteed with each bottle or the money will be refunded. Price only 50c. per bottle. Sold by F. R. Foster and A. B. Armstrong.

English Spavin Liniment removes all hard, soft or calloused lumps and blemishes from horses, blood spavins, curbs, splints, sweeney, ring-bone stifles, all swollen throats, coughs, etc. Save $50 by use of one bottle. Warranted the most wonderful blemish cure ever known. Sold by A. B. Armstrong, Druggist, Smethport, Pa.

RHEUMATISM CURED IN A DAY.—"Mystic Cure" for Rheumatism and Neuralgia radically cures in 1 to 3 days. Its action upon the system is remarkable and mysterious. It removes at once the cause and the disease immediately disappears. The first dose greatly benefits, 75 cents. Sold by A. B. Armstrong, Druggist, Smethport.

Sensitive people can purchase Humphreys' Specifics by simply asking the druggist for the needed number alone, without disclosing or mentioning the disease for which it is a cure.

Ignorance of the merits of DeWitt's Little Early Risers is a misfortune. These little pills regulate the liver, cure headache, dyspepsia, bad breath, constipation, and biliousness. Sold by A. B. Armstrong.
